

Dr. David Person is a research scientist with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game specializing in studies of predator-prey dynamics and wildlife-habitat relationships in Southeast Alaska. He has published research focusing on Sitka black-tailed deer, moose, wolves, and northern flying squirrels. His primary interest is in how habitat and landscape features mediate predation and influence fitness of wildlife species.